Yet when a film unit arrives at her high-school location for a shoot, coincidentally she finds herself playing the female lover of a knight-in-shiny armor, played by the cocky super-idol Justin.

Dawn intends to make an example out of Justin, but she is soon enslaved to his amazing collection of food. She begins to ponder: Am I in love with his food or with him?

But dating a super-idol isn't for the faint-hearted. Facing public scrutiny and attacks from all sides, Dawn must muster her strength, and confronts the "Great Satan" that stands between her and her love.

It is the most important of defining one's self and identity in adolescence. Most struggle through it, finding ways to try on different identities, be it goth, jock, or drama geek, until one sticks. Imagine how hard it would be to feel like an individual when people fail to differentiate between you and your twin sibling!

Poni and Mini do everything together: they go to the same school, get good grades, and play on the basketball team. But Poni, in typical teenage fashion, starts to feel angst about being so inextricably linked to her identical sister, and how it stands in her way of her individual identity. What was once convenient and even advantageous had become a burden, especially once they each catch the attention of two very different boys: the debate team captain and the school's resident knuckle head, who can't tell Poni and Mini apart.

Synopsis

For Chinese couples, taking “glam wedding photos” prior to the wedding may be the most important part. Newlyweds are willing to spend their life-savings to capture the happiest moments of their lives. A growing six billion USD industry, with related markets that thrive in China, Taiwan and the Chinese diasporas, wedding photography can be seen as manufacturer of love and happiness.

Following a top wedding photographer and two couples from Taiwan and China, this project explores how contemporary Chinese people regard marriage, and how they pursuit and define love and happiness. For the two couples and other newlyweds, wedding photos give them an opportunity to create a drastically different self from their realities. While the couples are buying into the glamour of this made-believe happiness, wedding photographer Shannon starts to question the true meaning behind the photos, struggling over the love for photography and his disdain for the consumer-driven culture that pays his rent.

Rong was a happy and content girl, but the fame she gained overnight thrusts her into a world in which everything lies beyond her control. She is forced to face a rich businessman who solves everything with money, the annoyingly male singer who only wants to take advantage of her fame, and the assistant with big breasts who fights flat out to get into the show business. Moreover, Rong's body has been divided and sold to promote different products from the sponsors; in order to make more money out of her, her manager keeps pestering Rong to have cosmetic surgeries.

What troubles Rong most is the paparazzi that follow her every step. Rong has lost not only her freedom but the opportunity to tell the truth. She truly wants to introduce her beloved lawyer boyfriend to the public, but shockingly, she finds the the biggest liar is her beloved boyfriend! It turns out that he isn't a lawyer but the tabloid journalist who stalks her everywhere!

The story begins as a chase between a star and the paparazzi but ends up as a battle between lovers. When one lie is uncovered after another, while one plot is planned after another, suspicion, jealousy and the feelings of insecurity are bound to follow. Can love stand to test when the lovers have a conflict of interest? Is this a crazy world or is it the unpredictable human nature that is crazy?

Synopsis

High in the mountains of Taiwan is the village of Smangus, inhabited by a group of Indigenous people. This film takes the audience into the mountains of Taiwan to witness the passing of a year amongst the Tayal. 20 years ago, the tribe was amongst the poorest on the island, many were forced to seek low paid labor in the cities, but the chief, icyeh Sulung, had a vision of great trees that would ensure the tribe's survival. The tribe found a forest of Cypress trees that were to change their future.

The rare Chinese cypress forests were estimated to be more than 2000 years old, and the interest from tourists turned Smangus into a thriving eco-tourism center. The sudden wealth and pressures from outside played havoc with the tribe's unity, and the tribe made a fateful decision to ensure their future – everything was to be shared. Smangus is the only place in Taiwan that now practices common ownership of land and property.

Synopsis

The ebb and flow dance to the perpetual cadence of the sun and moon. As the tide ebbs in the intertidal zone between the ocean and land in Taiwan's Changhua area, a great transformation takes place. With the stage set, the people of the area prepare to play their part in an epic performance—a true symphony of life.

This intertidal zone has never announced to the people, "Today the ebb tide will be at 9:36 AM", however, as the tide goes out, migratory birds, oxen, people and even dogs appear as if arriving for some prearranged rendezvous.

This slither of muddy intertidal zone in southern Changhua is the last remaining comparatively intact stretch of natural coastline in Taiwan; its unique preciousness hidden behind the guise of the pristine environment. Bordering this stretch of coast is a small village, which is both a long-standing traditional lifestyle and a living model for a sustainable future.
